

Be naive, in control, or trusting

To be naive, is to be playful without thinking of the consequences.

But everything has a price - and sometimes a very high price - like an unwanted pregnancy.

*I can try to control my actions with my feelings.
Like Fear (avoidance), anger (my way or the highway),
disgust (us vs. them), or sadness (like apathy)*

I don't want to!

Me neither!

But to trust, is to be playful, while exploring the consequences.

- * Why is the price high?*
- * Is it always high?*
- * When is it not?*
- * Where do the limits go?*

Tell me about yourself

To trust is not to be naive, but a dance to uncover the consequences without accidentally activating them.

/

It's no wonder why dating, negotiation, and collaboration require trust.

